

Shane Boyes is a third generation rancher who was raised in Southeast Saskatchewan.

From a very young age he loved stories and reading. He pursued a degree in Agriculture at the University of Saskatchewan and soon moved back to his roots and ranching. He spent the majority of his career as an oilfield chemist.

In addition, he and his family have raised Registered American Quarter Horses for more than sixty years. Shane is now retired and though his love and attention remains on his horses, it is now divided among his seven grandchildren. He is often found spinning a tale or singing a song about life on the ranch to one or more of them.

In his spare time, Shane loves to travel and is a fixer of all things, which comes in very handy on the ranch.
